We had to say it because someone always asks. But not this page isn't blank, so it kind of defeats the purpose when we print on it and say we left it blank on purpose. So please stop calling, emailing, faxing, telegraphing, smoke signaling, and otherwise pointing out the obvious that our blank page is not blank. We had to hire more people to process all the comments on this blank page and now that we have printed this, we will need to hire more people to process the comments pointing out that our blank page is no longer blank. We have used so much ink here that we can't stay within the budget and print page numbers. Please people, keep your comments and suggestions on topic, civil, and constructive. The editors parents are indeed married, and we have no desire to deposit certain choice objects in certain suggested orifices. Can't we all just get along? Seriously, is everyone who buys this magazine and misunderstood teenager, or 40 year olds living in their mom's basement? We can't produce our games fast enough, but this magazine is really getting expensive to produce and maintain. We're just a couple of guys working out of our garages. What started as a labor of love has become a Sisyphean task. We'll still keep producing our games, but if we bust the budget on the magazine, it will have to go all digital. Don't say we didn't warn you, this is serious business! We finally made enough money to quit our jobs, and now we are facing having to go back to work just to put out this magazine.....
